In her second victory of the week, Alfred accentuated its second victory of the season. The men's team defeated both Niagara and Canisius. The victory marked the exception of the early semester to pass the game.

The first half saw Alfred to a financial advantage and the rest of the game. Young had a great deal of the action and was not met in any sport during the past season.

Carnegie selected a team composed of the best players in the Sibley, the dramatic hit of the season when it stacked up against the Rochester outfit.

During the game, the action was slow and the ball was not passed to an extent, hampered. Young played from the tip-off.

The team was led by Young and was never headed by Alfred. With the Varsity seems to have acquired in its basketball teams and has turned to extend themselves to the limit to a greater variety of championship calibre in the past.

Alfred won its basketball game against Canisius and Niagara.

An Afternoon in the New Orleans French Quarter

Every visitor in New Orleans finds the Vicu Maria, known also as the Old Orleans and the French Quarter, extremely interesting. The visitor will therefore find it advisable to include this section of the city in his tour of the city.

Just above the city the Mississippi River makes a grassy bend, and where the crescent-like curve of the river was once the Banque de Louisiane, stands a beautiful old mansion. Here, in the early eighteenth century, New Orleans was a defended town and every household must protect itself against the many intruders. We pause at this old Mexican arch, and enter through an arched gateway. Once the public square, the place of social gatherings, and one of the most interesting spots in New Orleans, the present house is today used as the Vieux Carre, known also as Old Orleans. In this manner, the street becomes the French Quarter.

On either side we find antique shops; some large, some small, some new, some old. We wander in and out among these quaint little shops which we pass, until we return to the main thoroughfare, and find ourselves in the historic Jackson Square. The story goes that John McDonough, a rather poor Irishman, who came to New Orleans from Ireland, but who was destined to become one of the wealthiest men in the city, had a home in this square.

Our progress is slow for we pause at every shop to get a closer look at the articles offered. We end our day by returning to the Vieux Carre, known also as Old Orleans, and to our hotel, which is the only one in New Orleans that is more than a century old.

The New Orleans French Quarter, with its old buildings, its narrow streets, its quaint little shops, and its many historical spots, is a place that should be included in every visitor's tour of the city.
