A young rider learns western-style riding at Alfred University's Bromeley-Daggett Equestrian Center

A young rider, in the accompanying photograph, puts her horse through the paces on the closing day of the Western Equestrian Horsemanship Camp, part of Alfred University's Summer Programs. The western-style horsemanship classes offered instruction to riders ranging from beginner to advanced with an emphasis on having fun and safety amidst the beauty of Alfred University's Bromeley-Daggett Equestrian Center.
