Charities benefit from carnival

With the streets crowded with people and the scent of hot dogs and ketchup on Main Street, Hot Dog Day 2000 had many different organizations represented raising money and awareness for charities.

Magician Joe Ciaravino represented a new organization participating this semester, the King Alfred Jesters, at a booth where children could win up to three tickets by trying to throw all three hackey sacs into a hole in a wooden board.

Ciaravino indicated that some of the money the Jesters received will be used towards a performance for children confined to their beds at St. James Hospital in Hornell.

Annie Acton, a junior high school student, volunteered to sell baked goods for the Union University Church to help raise enough money to repair houses damaged in West Virginia by a natural disaster. This project is called Beach Work Camp.

"It's great for the kids, it's great for the college students," said Linda Travers, a former advisor for this project and a parent of one of the youths. "It brings a lot of people to the community."

Travers indicated that the people involved in the Beach Work Camp fund-raiser have divided responsibilities among themselves and the bake sale was one of her projects. She oversaw the three-to-four hour baking session which Acton and the other six children participated in.

Susan Mayberry, an AU professor of English who has been involved with the project for two months, thinks it ironic that seven children have to pay $350 each to volunteer their time.

"It's a good cause," pastor Laurie DeMott said. "We're trying to raise enough money to ease the church's budget. We're about half way there."

The church's next step is to hold a car wash at Shur Fine on May 13 to achieve their goal of raising $4,000.

Coll hosts final FNL of his career

BY KRISTEN HOFFMAN
NEWS EDITOR

The students who participated in Friday Night Live gave their last performance of the semester at 9:30 p.m. on April 14 in Holmes Auditorium.

FNL's decision to have President Edward G. Coll Jr. as host was overwhelmingly positive because it provided him a forum to bid farewell to students with a mixture of humor and appreciation.

"You're a great bunch for me to have been associated with," Coll said. "I'll miss your antics for about five minutes."

The audience clapped and cheered enthusiastically after this was said and throughout Coll's presentation, which created an atmosphere of high expectations for the rest of the show.

One of the funniest skits was "The Banging Brits" which consisted of two individuals wearing the British flag and trying to decide whether to rid the world of Jay Weisberger or "evil" Dan Napolitano. They finally decided to get rid of Napolitano because of his desire to bring an evil band to campus and beat up Weisberger while waiting for their appointment with Napolitano.

Another skit, which reversed the common stereotype that men are only interested in a woman because of her body, was filled with non-stop laughter because it was clever and original.

The actress in this skit consistently grew more and more upset as the two actors continuously complemented her on her higher brainpower. "Women are made for one thing: higher intellectual pursuit," one of the actors claimed.

Her response was to show the men her chest and reply indignantly that a woman can be a floozy if she chooses.

At the very end of the skit, another clever twist was presented when she left the scene and another actress walked by, swaying her hips from side to side. The men howled at her and made harassing comments.

Although the dysfunctional family skit was funny, its random humor was sometimes hard to follow.

In the beginning, husband and wife were sitting on a couch, when their son, Mattie, and their daughter, Sherri, appeared in the scene. Sherri was a hyperactive child, talking a-mile-a-minute to her father, jumping around excitedly, until her father sent her to the kitchen to pour him a drink.

When Sherri left the scene, the father said to Mattie "I want you to kill your sister." Mattie hesitated and discussed this nervously with his father, when an actor wearing an AU dining service T-shirt knocked on the door to express his love for the father, to which the response was the door slamming shut in his face.

The rejected lover was annoyed at being rejected and upon returning to the scene with an inflatable hammer, snuck up on the father, knocked him to the ground, and sat on him while beating him with the hammer. Eventually, the father got into it and took off his sports coat to reveal that he too was wearing an AU dining service T-shirt.

At the end of the skit, they continued wrestling while Sherri jumped around excitedly in the background.

The Wizard of Oz performance was broken down into several skits, interwoven throughout the entire FNL show, which helped to build suspense and keep the audience, captivated throughout the show.

The show ended with the five actors chanting in unison: "There is no place like Alfred."

Although Coll helped chant this as part of the skit, he also believes in these words. "I'm going to miss you and all you've done for my life," he said in reference to all AU students. □

Alfies recognize AU students

Ninth annual award nominees announced

BY KRISTEN HOFFMAN
NEWS EDITOR

The Alfie Awards Academy held a press conference naming the nominees for 22 categories for this year's Alfie Awards, last Wednesday, April 12 in Nevins Theatre.

Vice President for Publicity, David Clay said, "The Alfie Awards highlight student achievements, creativity, entertainment and spirit."

Senior Chandra Leister is nominated for Best Female Actor in a Comedy Series (FNL), Campus Spirit by an Individual, and Outstanding Community Service By a Campus Organization through the Hot Dog Day committee, where she is an executive chair.

"I'm so excited and surprised at the press conference," Leister said. "I love the Alfies, I'm a big fan."

Fiona Tolhurst, who nominated Leister for FNL's Best Female Actor in a Comedy Series, was nominated herself for Outstanding Faculty Contribution to Campus Life.

She was surprised when finding the official letter in her mailbox.

"I'm honored and excited to be nominated. It's a positive [reinforcement] that the University recognizes professors doing positive things for students outside the community," Tolhurst said.

Tolhurst is one of the faculty advisors for Women's Issues Coalition and Latin Club in addition to being the sole advisor for Alpha Phi Omega and a member of Omicron Delta Kappa.

About a year and a half ago, she helped develop the Committee on Racial Equality (CORE) in response to an incident at Gentleman Jim's to raise awareness of racial issues.

"What I like best about the Alfies is the way it recognizes students for things that might otherwise be over-looked," Tolhurst said.

"The Alfies definitely encourage students to be actively involved," said Alfie co-host Ben Farnsworth, senior. He is excited and honored about receiving this position and considers it one of his greatest accomplishments here at Alfred.

Senior Ann Jones will join Farnsworth as host this year.

The Sixth Annual Alfie Awards, with the theme: "A Night in the City," will be presented at 9:30 p.m., April 28 in Holmes Auditorium. Students are encouraged to vote from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. April 17 to 19 in the McNamara Room. □

All is good in the Woods

Every night sold out, a great cast, great props ... what more could a theatergoer ask for?

Maybe a play that you can walk out humming some tunes from? Into the Woods just doesn't have one of the signature songs we tend to think of when we talk about musicals.

That might have been the only gripe you could have left with from any of last week's performances of Into the Woods, staged in the C.D. Smith Theatre.

The actors were fantastic, the show was crisp and the effects were astounding. While the play itself has always been the topic of critical praise, I can't say the script, or the storyline are favorites of mine.

Nonetheless, one couldn't help but be impressed by the efforts of many of AU's students.

The show, which throws all the familiar fairy tales into one then twists them with 20th Century complications, was the first musical at AU since Mikado was staged four years ago.

The nice part about the C.D. Smith Theatre is its versatility. The black-box setting allowed for some marvelous effects, some of the best I've seen since coming to AU.

Then there were the puppets. The birds that served as Cinderella's companions, the giant's hen (you know, that lays the golden eggs?) and the marionette-style cast that faced the giant were just a few examples of how good this type of effect can be.

As for the actors, the list of good points is even longer.

Danielle Di Pillo, in a memorable performance, was at her best as the witch. Di Pillo, a different type of witch in 1998's Macbeth, walked the stage with confidence, portraying her character well.

Sophomore Brookye Zywar played a wonderful Cinderella that gets treated almost as badly by her prince as she did by her stepsisters originally.

Jason Shattuck and Nick Keeney were two audience favorites with their portrayals of princes. Their duet of "Agony" was one of the most memorable moments of the show.

Jack McDowell and Callie Hastings presented the baker and the baker's wife very well. Their quest for some domestic stability was one of the places in the play where one could see the real-world aspects of the play.

Of course, when the baker's wife gets stomped on by the giant, a feisty Renee Towers, it's not really the closure to the relationship we wanted. That, though, is the fault of James Lapine who wrote this story, not anyone at AU.

Others deserve mention, like Clinton Powell, who always seems to bring lots of lively energy to any role he plays. This time, as Jack (of beanstalk fame) he did very well.

Everyone enjoyed Shattuck doubling up as the Wolf who pursues Little Red Riding Hood, played very well by Emily Tucker. Tucker may have been cast into this role because of her youthful looks, but she showed great flair. Tucker is clearly a versatile actor.

Jessica Sessler played Rapunzel, a character that we just don't get to see a lot of, despite what is a seemingly heavy role in one of many subplots. But, jeez, can she sing.

Really, there were no slouches among the cast and directors J. Stephen Crosby and Luanne Clark, both professors in the Division of Performing Arts, should be proud.

The only moments when things went awry was when someone was singing with his or her back to you, bound to happen in any "in the round" setup. This may not have been a problem had I not been sitting right next to the band, so, in fairness, this might have just been a problem on one side of the stage.

All in all, this was an excellent show. Hopefully, AU will try a musical more often than once a college generation. □ group by selling tickets to the public for hot dogs and games.

"We've done Hot Dog Day for several years," Frey said. "It has been successful ever sense the first year."

He indicated that currently, the goal of Habitat for Humanity is to raise their 30-35 thousand-dollar account to 45-50 thousand dollars in order to start their next building project in Wellsville.

Dorothy Schmelzer and Denny Culbert represented Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) and, like Frey, also sold tickets to the public. Schmelzer pointed that this is their first time participating in Hot Dog Day.

Culbert said that his favorite part of Hot Dog Day is being able to help out with a worthy cause. "It's [HDD] making a lot of money for some charities," he said. □

Café Za unique to Alfred

BY JUDY TSANG
MANAGING EDITOR

After an almost two-semester wait for the opening of Café Za, students were able to visit the restaurant for the first time after spring break.

Moving away from the traditional and monotonous offerings of pizza and burgers, Café Za offered the town of Alfred a twist to their food.

Going to dinner one Saturday evening, Café Za entertained a handful of customers. After initially entering the restaurant, patrons had to push through a heavy red cloth, where they found themselves facing a counter, blocking off the kitchen area. Seating is found running along the wall on the right and the left side of the door.

The restaurant offers a different menu each day and that particular Saturday, the dish of the moment was Shepherd's Pie. The selection offered is rather limited.

The small menu made my dinner party of four initially confused. Between the four of us, we ordered the Thai curry chicken, sautéed vegetables and grilled marinated chicken. Each order came with jasmine rice.

Beverages offered were commercial drinks, such as Snapple and various flavored teas.

After ordering, we found ourselves a table and waited for our names to be called. Although the curry chicken and the vegetables were ready fairly quickly, the grilled chicken took some time.

The curry chicken came in a bowl, poured over the rice in a broth-like manner, making it somewhat of a stew. The curry was not as spicy as traditional curry would be. It was sweet with a bit of hot aftertaste.

The vegetable and rice was a hot meal, despite its cold salad impression. It offered a sweet and unique taste.

Aside from rice, the grilled chicken entrée also came with a blend of vegetables, including green olives, asparagus and lettuce. The taste was reminiscent of a backyard charcoal grill.

Pieces of clay with information about Café Za imprinted on them acted as the restaurant's business cards and were free for customers to take.

The only complaint heard at the table, aside from the wait, was the portions of food. After consuming dining hall food for so much of the semester, we were ready for good food and Café Za teased us with its smaller portions. □

STUDENT SENATE UPDATE

Open Forum at Student Senate presents debate

BY JUDY TSANG

Tears and tension were present among the many senators at last week's Student Senate meeting.

Senators thought the meeting would be a short one, after President Seth Mulligan noted that with unfinished business, "of which we have none." But that changed when floor was presented to open forum.

A guest speaker, Lindsay Calkins, was present to speak about two AU seniors, Brian Pilliod and Michael Pilliod. "I'm asking you not to judge those involved [with the situation] but of Alfred University's decision," Calkins requested.

Calkins proceeded to indicate that both Pilliods were suspended for a year for an off-campus incident in February, where the two acted in self-defense. Specifics of the incident were not presented to the forum.

Dean of Student Affairs Jerry Brody was given an opportunity to explain the judicial due process the students underwent, which "have been approved up and down."

He further emphasized that if there is a member of the hearing board that the defendants felt were biased toward the case, they have the right to ask for them to be "replaced."

"[I feel] this is an inappropriate request you are hearing," Brody said of Calkins' request.

As chairman of the forum, Mulligan stressed that the "sensitivity of the matter cannot be discussed here [at Senate]."

"By closing the floor, we don't have to come in contact or touch the legalities," Mulligan continued, in regards to the pertinence of such a controversial issue on the Senate floor.

Budget hearing weekend brought about a record-breaking total of nine hours to figure out next year's budget allocation, with eight-and-half hours on Saturday and another half-hour on Sunday.

Senators were stressed to use their money, considering the college is reluctant to give any more money if the money is not being used.

Associate Dean of Students Sue Smith spoke at the forum of her efforts to start a mentoring program. Application forms for current students are available in the Senate office. □

SAM brothers raise money to benefit American Heart Association

BY JAY WEISBERGER

Late at night on Academic Alley last week, a thumping sound could be heard coming from out front of the campus center.

The sound was there during the day, too, as Sigma Alpha Mu presented its annual "Bounce for Beats" fundraiser outside of Powell. "It allows the community to see that [Greek life] is not just about partying," said George Quint, a brother of Sigma Alpha Mu and coordinator of the event.

The event requires the participation of every brother, as they must keep a basketball bouncing continuously for over 48 hours. This year's event started at noon Thursday and ended at 5 p.m. Saturday when the HDD carnival ended.

The brothers sold hearts for the American Heart Association. Once purchased, these hearts are placed on the basketball net and backboard that goes along with the event.

To accomplish this, all 31 brothers of the house are required to work for three hours, often in the middle of the night.

Quint indicated that most brothers do more than their requirement.

Senior David Silbergleit said that the event raised $800 last year.

"We're aiming for about the same amount this year," he indicated.

Silbergleit explained that the house has been doing the event since the house came to AU in 1989.

Silbergleit said this is the house's largest fundraiser of the year, adding that the fall semester's jail-a-thon is also a major event for them. □

Art of Kissing shocks, entertains

BY CARMEN ANDREWS
STAFF WRITER

"Kissing is oral pleasure," explained William Cane during his seminar "The Art of Kissing" last Tuesday night. The first event to kick off the Hot Dog Day celebration went on with a loud moan at the Orvis Center on Alfred State College campus.

"Ninety-eight percent of us want more kissing," said Cane, which is one of the reasons he wrote his book, The Art of Kissing. He also said, "I wrote it to get more sex."

The show began when the front row, approximately three feet away from the couples, was full. Cane said he wants everyone to be close enough see the kissing. He said he needs the audience to feel like they are peeping in on the couples' private living rooms.

Cane's smooth, seductive voice filled the auditorium and captivated the approximately 100 people in attendance. Gold star-shaped balloons and red, blue and purple balloons with white stars sprinkled the room, and popular songs about kissing such as, "It's In His Kiss" by Cher set the mood.

Five couples signed up to help demonstrate kisses and act out romantic scripts when Cane asked them to, through his microphone.

"Ladies, pick up your scissors," said Cane. He then told the men to stay seated for their hair cuts. Cane asked the six couples to act out a hair-cutting scene. The woman's role was to pretend to cut her partner's hair and act extremely seductive. The man had to sit there with a brown towel around his neck and resist the urge to kiss her.

While the couples were kissing, Cane urged us to watch them. He also spoke of the fun and importance of kissing. "Kissing can be an expression of fighting or love," Cane said.

He reminded the audience that kissing is safe. "There is only one reported case of AIDS caused by kissing. This show may save your life," he added.

Cane told the couple to perform many different types of kissing. They acted out the electric kiss, which is when you rub your feet on the rug and give your partner a shock and a candy kiss which is when she tries to get his mint from his mouth into hers.

The couples also demonstrated the spanking kiss. This kiss can easily be done by lightly, but firmly spanking your partner when you are kissing him or her.

Cane also gave visual information by utilizing a screen and film projector. He showed the audience with a pie chart the percentages on how men feel about lipstick. According to Cane's statistics, 67 percent of men don't mind lipstick, 25 percent dislike it and 8 percent like the taste.

He also had a chart to assist men in shaving habits. According to Cane, 33 percent of women like the feel of stubble and 66.3 percent dislike stubble. He told the men to not shave one night because a third of the women he sees will be turned on by their short facial hair.

Cane also explained that we are not the only beings to kiss. He said that fish, horses, dogs and apes also kiss.

During his lecture, Cane revealed the places men and women like to be kissed the most. He said women are turned on when they are kissed on the ankles and on the neck. He told guys, "neglect her neck at the risk of your own."

He then advised women to pick one of her lover's fingers and kiss it and bite it in order to get his attention.

William Cane's book, The Art of Kissing, has 30 different kinds of kisses to explore. □

Third annual Derby held hill behind Davis and Kenyon Halls were filled with spectators, as well as up along the bales of hay.

Hot Dog Day week began with the "Art of Kissing" on Tuesday, over at Orvis Center at Alfred State College. But the Pine Hill Derby officially kicked off Hot Dog Day Weekend on the east side of town.

Behind Ade Dining Hall, right below "hairpin" on Pine Hill, AU students and visitors gathered to see approximately nine student-made carts compete in the Pine Hill Derby Friday early evening, at 5:00 p.m.

Two of the creators of the "wooden wonder, the Rocketdog," Seth Nickerson and Kristen Schreuders, both sophomore mechanical engineer majors, emphasized the work they dedicated to planning and building their cart.

"We started last year," Nickerson said, indicating that the body of the cart was from last year. "[We have worked] all the time ... since about a month ago."

Nickerson and Schreuders entered themselves and their building team into the Pine Hill Derby as part of their requirement for their dynamics class.

Setup for the Derby began as early as 3:00 p.m. With the cars cleared from the road down below "hairpin," students helped out in lining the road with bales of hay.

When time came for the carts to compete, the pressure was on. The

The relaxing and happy atmosphere of the crowd, soaking up the sun, was a clear indication to an exciting weekend to come.

"The crowd is at least two to three times the size of last year's," Aminah Brelvi, a sophomore liberal arts major, pointed out.

The carts entered in the race ranged from the skeleton of lawnmowers, elongated bicycles and a wheelchair. Students cosmetically enhanced their carts with spray-painted designs, streamers, stickers and glitter.

One distinct cart even had audio speakers hooked up inside.

The first run down for the carts was an agility test to test the maneuvering skills of the carts around placed bottles. Each cart was allowed two runs.

Then came the test in speed. Each group pushed their cart up the hill and one by one, drivers drove their carts down the hill. Their time was recorded.

Although most students were informed of only one run down, a second run was held.

This created a conflict for carts damaged during the first run. One such case was the "Rocketdog."

"Dr. Williams told us that there was only one run," Nickerson protested. "[The second run] is not fair." □
