Fiat Lux endorses Mike Pellicciotti
for Student Senate President

Fiat Lux

The Student Newspaper of Alfred University

WORLD NOTES*LOCAL

Elections for Student Senate president and vice president will be held Monday and Tuesday on the second floor of the campus center.

NATIONAL

Members of Clinton's Cabinet were shouted down Wednesday by a crowd opposed to another war with Iraq when they attempted to speak at a town meeting held on the Ohio State University campus. • The U.S. women's hockey team captured the first-ever Olympic gold in the sport Tuesday with a 3-1 win over the Canadian team.

INTERNATIONAL

Elections continued in India Wednesday with polling in the state of Assam despite earlier bombings, killings, threats and ballot stealing in other areas of India. At least 22 died in the violence. • Voyager I, launched in 1977, became the most distant man-made object in Space Tuesday, passing Pioneer 10 in the history books. • A West African peace-keeping force charged with restoring Sierra Leone's President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah to power attempted to expand its power base around Freetown Wednesday as ousted rebels reportedly terrorized surrounding areas.

PERSONALITIES*MIKE & BEN LINK

Mike Link would like people to know he has quite a capacity to be serious. Meanwhile, his younger brother Ben would like people to know he is not as serious as he seems.

At first, this might lead one to believe they are polar opposites. Actually, Ben, a junior theater and history major, and Mike, a senior philosophy major, have many things in common.

Both of the Links work at Express Food Mart and are assistant scout masters of Alfred's Boy Scout Troop 19.

They are also both DJs at WALF and Ben is the current station manager and Mike used to be the program director.

Mike is directing the upcoming play Lonely Planet, and Ben is its technical director. Both brothers also dance with the AU dance theater.

The brothers do differ in their futures plans, however.

"I'm going to try to be a writer/filmmaker until the age of 35, when I plan to run for president every four years until I'm elected," said Mike.

"After leaving the University," said Ben, "I'll probably work for the boy scouts as a professional scout."

"I also plan not to vote for my brother," he added, laughing.

Candidates talk

BY MEGAN ALLEN AND MICHELLE PANCOE

The three candidates for Student Senate President are as different as boxers and briefs.

In response to a student question, candidates Mike Christakis and Mike Pellicciotti said they wear briefs, while candidate Mark Torrey said he wears boxers.

Looking at their experiences in activities on campus and their ideas for the future of the Student Senate, the three candidates were divided along the same lines as their underwear choices.

Mark Torrey, a junior liberal arts general studies major, spent the majority of his speech on cutting the bureaucracy in the University and improving the interest level of students in Student Senate meetings.

"This school is plagued with bureaucracy," said Torrey. "Considering the size of this University, almost everything can be running on a friendship basis with the minimal amount of bureaucracy that is necessary."

Torrey said Student Senate has also "grown amazingly unwieldy and huge." He advocated getting rid of some Senate rules, such as the mandatory attendance policy.

Torrey also stressed in his speech that Senate meetings are very boring, causing few students to be interested in attending. "Mandatory boredom generally isn't popular," he said. To make Senate more interesting to students, Torrey advocated the Senate reaching out to students, rather than "making more rules."

Torrey briefly touched on a few plans he would like to see implemented on campus. He suggested the Career Development Center create a GRE seminar, and hastening the process of installing Ethernet connections in the residence halls.

Mike Pellicciotti, a sophomore business administration major, stressed communicating with the community outside the University, and increasing communication among students.

Pellicciotti, who is currently Senate Vice President, highlighted internal changes in the Senate this year, including the cabinet and financial restructuring. These changes have made the Senate more "equitable and efficient," he said.

Trustees accept budget changes for '98

BY MEGAN ALLEN

An across-the-board budget decrease of up to 6 percent was approved by the Board of Trustees last week, bringing the downsizing first discussed in the fall one step closer to reality. The $1.3 million created by the reduction will be reallocated within the University.

A five-year budget plan for the University was also adopted by the Trustees.

The $1.3 million increases include a 3 percent salary increase next year for all faculty and staff and replacement of 20 percent of all computer equipment on campus. The five-year plan includes an additional 8.4 percent salary increase over the years following.

Last May's $26,839,000 proposed budget is being used as the base to decrease by 6 percent. The University is currently operating under a budget approximately 3.4 percent below the May proposed budget. The reduced budget was adopted in the fall because the freshman class was underenrolled by 30 students.

This does not necessarily mean that departments only need to cut 2.6 percent to achieve the 6 percent, however, warned Wes Bentz, president of the Faculty Senate. The hiring freeze enacted in the fall which produced the reduced budget applied to all positions that were open, and therefore may mean that a position currently empty needs to be filled, he said.

The University returned to the May budget to use for the changes because it was thought to be more equitable for the departments, explained Louis Lichtman, a member of the Commission on Planning and the Faculty Senate.

Currently the University deans and vice presidents are looking at ways to either decrease their expenses or increase their revenue to achieve the 6 percent. Revenues could be raised through such programs as summer courses, long distance learning programs or special conferences, said President Edward G. Coll Jr.

Their proposed budgets will be presented to the Commission on Planning for review. The Commission will then decide if the budgets will benefit the University, said Lichtman. The Commission could then request the officials make changes, or they could decide to reduce the $1.3 million increases, he said.

Coll said a basic budget for next year could be decided as early as the end of this month, but Lichtman and Bentz guessed it would be later in the semester.

It's all "careful guesswork" at this point, said Lichtman. He predicted next year's budget will not be finished until fairly close to the end of the semester.

Bentz agreed, saying, "Nothing is firm."

"(We) simply don't know, and won't know (the budget) for a while," he said.

"It's hard to say where it's all going to fall," said Peggy

Fine Host delisted from NASDAQ

Company forced to restate financial records; reports losses since '94

BY MICHELLE PANCOE

When AU awarded Fine Host the dining services contract last year, they did not know what they were getting into.

The Securities and Exchange Commission is conducting an informal investigation of the company and NASDAQ, a major stock exchange, has delisted Fine Host, according to a Feb. 6 press release from Fine Host.

"They've reassured us that it in no way will affect the quality of service or their contractual obligations," said Vice President for Student Affairs and Dean of Students Jerry Brody.

Fine Host provides food and beverage concession and catering services to more than 900 college and institutional facilities in addition to AU.

According to the company's press release, Fine Host still has approximately $100 million in cash and cash equivalents, as well as a substantial cash flow. But others are not so sure.

The Wall Street Recommendations, located on the Internet at wsrn.com, ranks Fine Host's stock 149th out of 150 stocks in the business services industry group.

Shares of Fine Host stock have dropped to a value of about $10 a share from a high of $43 a share in October.

Fine Host announced earlier this month that it will reissue all of its financial statements since 1994, which it has been discovered are grossly incorrect. The corrected financial records will report losses of $1.6 million in 1994, $4.3 million in 1995, $6.3 million in 1996 and $11.4 million for the first nine months of 1997, according to the press release.

Two senior officers of the company were terminated in December, when the discrepancies were discovered.

The press release attributes the

Clary found

Timothy Clary, a junior art major, who was discovered missing last Wednesday, was found alive and well Wednesday afternoon.

His parents theorized that Clary left because he may have felt "overwhelmed" and embarrassed because he felt that he had let the ski team and his parents down, said Michael Schell, a family friend who is acting as a spokesperson for the family.

Clary was a member of the ski team, but not registered for classes. When it was recently discovered he was not registered, there was a question of whether or not the team would be disqualified from competing in the regional competition this weekend.

Pellicciotti and Hilgert endorsed

The executive board of the Fiat Lux has decided to endorse Mike Pellicciotti for Student Senate President and Greg Hilgert for Vice President.

Mark Torrey has revolutionary ideas that we feel are not feasible for a Student Senate. For example, Senate has responsibilities that could not be accomplished without the attendance policy he would like to abolish. We also realize that though Senate meetings may be boring, without the structure already established, it would be a useless body. We are glad Torrey ran however, since his unconventional ideas will give Senate and students ideas to consider.

Mike Christakis and Pellicciotti have very similar ideas and qualifications. Both have served as Senate Vice President for a year and have established connections with the University administration.

We see two major differences between Christakis and Pellicciotti. Christakis has extremely good connections with the involved students, but Pellicciotti appears to have made the effort to reach out to all students, even those not involved in major organizations.

The second clear difference is their attitude toward the Greek community. While Christakis wants to increase their involvement through the councils, Pellicciotti expressed an interest in making Senate meetings more beneficial to the Greek representatives. His idea to have a representative attend Village Board meetings and then report to Senate would include information in Senate pertinent to all students, including Greeks. After the meeting, Pellicciotti also demonstrated a more comprehensive knowledge of issues affecting the Greek community.

In the same conversation, Pellicciotti stated that he would not have run for the position if he did not feel he represented the entire student body. We feel the desire to be a voice for all 2,000 AU students is a good goal for a president.

Pellicciotti also has ideas about expanding the Senate Web page to make it relevant to students, as well as useful. We feel this would benefit the entire campus. Also his interest in reaching out to the Alfred community could only improve the residents' image of students, and the students' understanding of the community. Pellicciotti's record as vice president is impressive, including the realization of his campaign promise to start a committee between AU and Alfred State College.

While we feel Pellicciotti is the strongest candidate, we also support some of Christakis' ideas. We think his suggestion of a wish list for student concerns is a good one. We also agree with his recommendation of including more student input on University committees. Finally, setting up informal discussions between administrators and students is something which would benefit all those involved.

Hilgert, while running unopposed, seems a good choice for Vice President. His range of activities and diversity of interests demonstrate his willingness to involve a variety of organizations in Senate. Though he appeared slightly nervous during his speech, he came across as a friendly and personable candidate.

Hilgert also commented during his speech that in the name Student Senate, "the student comes before Senate." We agree with this statement and support Hilgert's goal of focusing on the students.

Pellicciotti and Hilgert also seem to have started a good working relationship through their recent visits to organizations, and we feel the campus would benefit from this type of teamwork. After the meeting Hilgert commented that he could work with any of the candidates, though his ideas and Pellicciotti's are most similar. With their cooperation we believe real change could come to the Student Senate.

We are glad candidates with such diverse views chose to run this semester, giving students a choice. However, having considered the candidates and their ideas, we have chosen to endorse Pellicciotti and Hilgert. With Pellicciotti's commitment to representing every student, we hope that Student Senate will indeed represent the student body.

We suggest all students vote in the election Monday and Tuesday. □

COLUMNIST

Feminism: it's about equality

BY MEGAN PARK

In a recent discussion with a friend at another university, the subject of feminism came up. When I nonchalantly said, "I'm a feminist," I was surprised at his immediate response of, "No, you aren't."

As I explored his reasons for being reluctant to call me a feminist, I was disturbed. His basic reasoning was that I was not a feminist because I did not feel that women were superior to men and I did not take radical measures to assert the advancement of women.

Or, as he put it, "You don't hate men and you don't campaign for special privileges."

But to me, that isn't being a feminist.

Feminism is about equal rights. It's about realizing that I have the same ability to excel in any job as a male. It's about having the same opportunities as any man, and being recognized as a capable person regardless of gender. It's about not being overlooked because of my sex.

It's like civil rights—the idea is not that minorities should get preferential treatment or that they're superior, but that they should get the same treatment. Unfortunately, efforts to gain equal treatment often take the form of forcing token hirings or admittances.

I am a feminist. I believe that a woman can be just as competent as a male in any job, and vice versa. It fully depends on the individual.

I don't "hate men." That isn't feminism—that's manifest bitterness.

I don't support preferential treatment. I see that as a misguided attempt to force equality—something that ends up only enforcing the status quo and creating a backlash.

I don't believe that wearing dresses, perfume and make-up is wrong. I don't believe that shaving legs is oppression. And I don't believe that not doing any of these things means you aren't a real woman. Outward appearances are inconsequential in the long run.

All these positions made my friend decide that I wasn't a feminist. He said I didn't fit the stereotype neatly packaged up and fed to him—a stereotype, of a woman fighting for something preferential and more upset than she should be against a bias that no longer exists.

And for those who believe that feminism has no place because that bias no longer exists, I'm afraid to tell you you're wrong. It sometimes exists in education—I had teachers in high school who consistently underrated my abilities and urged me to seek help from my male peers, despite my better grasp of the subject (to the point where I tutored some of them) and a higher average in the class. I wasn't the only one.

It exists in conceptions of what women can handle. I've had people tell me that women can't do certain jobs because they are too "emotional." And those that aren't too emotional are too "pushy."

It also exists in employment. Anyone can go find figures illustrating that the glass ceiling still exists, not only in salaries but in promotions too.

It isn't as prevalent or public, but that does not mean it's gone.

What this all comes down to is that there is an ingrained idea of what a woman can be, should be, and will be. Until this changes, there is a need for feminism, and I will be a feminist. Not the stereotypical feminist in combat boots with a shaved head and unshaved legs, holding a sign saying "Men Suck," but the true meaning of the word to me—one who believes in equality, not superiority, and equal chances. □

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Responsibility to Senate too much

DEAR EDITOR:

As the co-president of a Senate organization (the Alfred Review), I have some concerns about the general tenor of Student Senate's administration.

In my two years dealing with Senate, I have felt that there is a huge inequality in the relationship between my organization and theirs.

The Alfred Review happens to be a small group, with 6-10 active members. We get a relatively small budget from Senate—more than some, like WIC and the Skateboard Club, but less than 10 percent that of the yearbook, for instance.

In exchange for this budget, we work hard. Besides the weekly Senate meeting there are other meetings that confuse me.

I have to justify my budget to Senate every year. Senate keeps in touch with e-mails, saying I must attend things or things are due.

In short, I feel like I work for Senate, and in a position under all its own officers. There is a disparity

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Student organizations need more leeway

DEAR EDITOR:

I was interested to note in the last issue of the Fiat Lux that Admissions was looking for students to help in the recruitment process. The point of the "Blurb" was that students could host prospectives, function as tour guides and take part in the interviewing process.

I thought back to my day here as a prospective and recalled what influenced me to come here. It certainly had little to do with my irritably bouncy tour guide, the speeches we had to listen to, or the sparkling campus center.

What attracted me was of course Harder Hall, the rolling hills and Andrew Stehle. Well, not really Andrew Stehle, but what he was involved in: Alternative Cinema.

My one remaining worry about coming to Alfred was that I would be so isolated that I would miss the foreign and independent films I had attended almost weekly in my home town of Pittsburgh. Alternative Cinema was definitely a factor in my coming here, as I'm sure many of our clubs were for other students and are now for prospectives.

As such, our clubs and organizations are Alfred University's assets. They not only present diversions, public service opportunities and cultural events for students and the surrounding community, but show, in a nutshell, the kinds of people who are Alfred students.

Their officers, myself included, work hard to provide these services, and this reflects well on the University. Alfred would be pretty bland without groups such as the Forest People, the Alfred Review, the Fiat Lux, Umoja, the Science Fiction Club, the Art Union, Spectrum, WIC, the Greeks and the Skateboard Club.

It takes an incredible amount of energy to keep clubs going year after year. We are lucky to have a wonderful support system of faculty/staff advisors, as well as the Student Activities staff, who make it easier to function.

However, every year, every single organization must fight for its very existence. It is not enough that the clubs provide their various services to the University, but they are forced, under the threat of funding withdrawal, to attend myriad irrelevant meetings: a Student Senate meeting every week, as well as committee meetings. While there are important forums, and students should be involved in them, there is no reason that the hard-working officers of clubs should have one more thing to worry about. Many of the clubs have few active members, despite the many who benefit from them, and little time to spare.

It is my opinion that Senate should avoid strong-arming already busy club members into their meetings, and instead encourage individuals who are concerned with the issues discussed there to come of their own accord. We, as officers, are not simply trying to fund our own private projects but are working for the University, and so should be treated like the valuable asset we are.

Sincerely,
Rachel Lange

Speaker addresses sex and conflict issues

BY PATRICK BOYLE

In spite of a number of jokes, the crowd in Nevins Theater remained solemn as conflict resolution specialist Bob Hall addressed the causes and consequences of acquaintance rape earlier this month.

The program, titled "Hands Off, Let's Talk: Sex, Conflict and Intimacy," was sponsored by SAVAP.

Hall included many witticisms in his speech to put the audience at ease during the serious topic.

Hall focused on the communication problems people have in relationships and how those problems can lead to unfortunate consequences, including sexual assault.

According to Hall, everyone has a sex drive that has the capacity to be "both selfish and insatiable."

This intense drive is at the root of conflicting sexual agendas and, at its worst, sexual assault. The pressures of these drives can be countered however, by an open and honest dialogue that fosters intimacy, said Hall. He defined intimacy as the consideration of another before, not instead of, self.

When two people are not able to have an open and honest dialogue with each other it is very easy for their expectations of each other to become confused, explained Hall. To illustrate this, Hall asked for a volunteer from the audience to join him on a couch placed on stage.

Hall and freshman Chrissy Nyman proceeded to act out the aftermath of a date in which they exchanged a series of cloaked advances and rebuttals. For instance, Hall placed his arm around Nyman's shoulders and she slid to the farthest corner of the couch.

Hall said in situations like these openness shuts down and dialogue between the participants stops. Once dialogue has shut down it is very hard to maintain a genuine sense of intimacy and these situations often become fertile breeding grounds for sexual assaults, he explained.

The most dangerous obstacle to communications is when people use alcohol and drugs to combat their feelings of awkwardness, said Hall. This can undermine their self-control and make them totally insensitive to the wishes of others. Once this has happened the route to a sexual assault becomes short.

Hall also discussed the consequence of rape on victims. Victims of an acquaintance rape, a sexual assault committed by someone the victim knows, often have a hard time recognizing that they were assaulted because their experience does not conform to the stereotype of a stranger jumping out of the bushes, said Hall.

Victims often blame themselves because they believe they somehow encouraged their attacker, he explained. When victims talk to friends for support they are frequently greeted with skepticism. People do not like to confront the possibility of acquaintance rape because it makes them realize that it could very easily have happened to them, he said.

Hall said the denials people make to themselves and that they receive from others contribute to the reasons why rape is the most underreported kind of personal violence.

When it is not reported people often assume that it doesn't happen or that the victims do not mind, he said.

Since founding the "Learning To Live With Conflict" program in 1987, Hall has appeared at over 500 colleges in the United States and Canada, speaking on various topics including self-defense and conflict resolution. □ Senate, now we must continue to reach outside of it," he said. Pellicciotti said if elected he would establish a new Senate liaison to attend all Alfred Village Board meetings.

The liaison would report to the Senate on the Village's activities, he explained. He said this would help keep students updated on issues important to them, such as off-campus housing and taxation of vendors.

Pellicciotti stressed the importance of talking to students. "I'll represent the smaller issues that have big effects in our everyday lives," he said.

Pellicciotti said if elected he would meet with the Deans and the Faculty Senate to strengthen communication between students and administration.

To increase communication among students, Pellicciotti said he wanted to continue publishing a Student Senate newsletter and providing copies of it to Greek houses.

Also Pellicciotti said he wanted to expand the Senate Web page so that AU students and students at other colleges could learn about the Student Senate.

"My ultimate goal is to enfranchise all types of students, especially those who not only don't know about Senate, but... those who don't care about it," he said.

Mike Christakis, a junior political science and history major, said "Power to the students" is my theme, serving my fellow students is my purpose, the little problems are my concern." Christakis was Senate Vice President last year.

Quoting Henry Miller, Christakis accented the importance of "pointing the way," as opposed to leading students.

Christakis discussed his visits to organizations over the past two weeks, and the "wish list" of student concerns he has written from those visits. He said he would begin trying to make those wishes reality after taking office.

Specifically Christakis said he wanted to compile reference material for scholarships.

Also Christakis said he wanted to improve funding for study abroad programs, so that it would be available to more students.

To improve communication between students and administration, Christakis proposed appointing a few students to University committees, who would then report to the Senate.

Also Christakis suggested having weekly round table discussions with 10 students and administrators.

Mike Christakis

Christakis also said he wanted organizations to begin introducing themselves in Senate, telling other students what they do and when they meet in Senate meetings.

Greg Hilgert, a junior psychology major, is the only candidate for Senate Vice President.

Hilgert highlighted several of his activities and positions including SAVAP advocate, Sigma Alpha Mu alumni chair and Senator, tour guide, student representative on the Board of Trustees and Hot Dog Day special events chair last year.

"I am a very action and goal-oriented person," he said. Hilgert also said "students are the most important things on this campus." □ discrepancies to "improper capitalization of overhead expenses, improper charges to acquisition reserves and recognition of certain income in periods prior to earning such income."

Daniel Acton, professor of accountancy, explained the company did not record expenses it should have and recorded income it had not received. This made the company appear to be in a better financial situation than it actually was, he said.

Acton also said the company had been audited by outside accountants each year. Either the accountants were negligent or the company hid the discrepancies very carefully, he said.

Fine Host has retained a national management consulting firm to oversee management of the company. Owner of the management firm Gerald Buccino said, "The company has moved quickly to identify and correct irregularities that occurred in the past." □

In a letter to Alfred University, the president of Fine Host said, "Our business continues uninterrupted and unimpeded."

The future of Fine Host at AU is uncertain. If Fine Host has enough cash flow to counter its losses, the company could do fine, Brody said. If the stock prices drop, the company could be bought out or it could go bankrupt, he said.

Brody also mentioned the possibility that Fine Host may sell its contract with AU before it reached the point of bankruptcy.

The University has two options if Fine Host does file for bankruptcy: AU could hire the current staff and run the dining halls themselves, or hire another company, Brody said. He said being part of the bidding process last spring made him realize how interested companies were in bidding to provide services for AU. "Everybody was interested in bidding," he said.

"Our obligation is to provide the best quality food service we can," he said. He added that if that does not happen "[the University] will take an alternative step." □

Broderick, support staff president and a member of the Commission on Planning.

The increases

The majority of the $1.3 million increases will pay for salary increases and technology upgrades.

These increases, or "identified needs," were areas the Commission on Planning decided needed more funding, said Lichtman.

The salary increases are in addition to a yearly 4 percent cost of living increase to bring the salaries up to the salaries at competitive colleges.

The technology upgrade includes the hiring of a technology coordinator and the implementing of a voice mail system and a laptop rental program for students.

Money was also allocated to the three colleges within the University to pay for faculty development, said Lichtman, such as travel expenses and materials for classes.

Also included is money for debt caused by the athletic department's time in the Presidents' Athletic Conference, money for the marketing, or advertising, of the University.

Money is also allocated for admissions, including money for international recruiting.

Faculty reactions

While the exact department budgets are still being investigated, faculty generally had compliments for the process and are warily optimistic.

Lichtman said he is very pleased because the budget changes have been an effort by everyone on campus. "The feeling on campus is that it's being done up front, out in the open," he said.

Frances Viggiani, a Faculty Senate member, agreed: "Faculty have generally felt informed." Viggiani said she was optimistic about the changes, though she said she was concerned about enrollment. "You just don't know" what enrollment will be, she said.

"Overall it seems like a reasonable thing to do," said John Howard, a Faculty Senate member. Howard said the increases in the money allotted to technology, salary and admissions will make the University more competitive.

Also the 6 percent gained from cutting expenses or adding revenue "motivates the faculty and administration to become more entrepreneurial, efficient or both," said Howard. However, he said he questioned the 11.4 increase in salaries across-the-board over the next five years, and thought it should be looked at more carefully.

Bill Cassidy, associate professor of human studies and chair of human studies, said while the budget cuts were not good, they could have been a lot worse. He also said he agreed with most of the increases, though he was not convinced pursuing long distance learning programs would create revenue.

Faculty Senate member Louis Greiff said he feels positive overall about the changes at the University. "It's a good strategy and process." □

Bands scheduled

BY MARIE LOWELL AND MEGAN ALLEN

Smashmouth and Third Eye Blind are scheduled to perform in McLane Center March 20, the Student Activities Board announced recently.

"I was very excited," said Debbie Nall, a senior business administration and communication studies major, when she found out the bands were coming to AU. She said she didn't know the name Smashmouth previously, though she had heard their music. She is very familiar with Third Eye Blind's music, she also said.

"I don't personally like that kind of music," said Shawn Underwood, a freshman communication studies major, who is not planning to attend the concert. He also said he was disappointed in the choice because "They're one hit wonders... I don't think they'll be around long."

Smashmouth hit No. 1 on the modern rock chart with the single "Walking on the Sun" from their album "Fush Yu Mang."

Third Eye Blind also hit No. 1 on the modern rock chart and No. 7 on the Billboard chart with the single "Semi-Charmed Life" from their self-titled album. Third Eye Blind is currently on a U.S. tour which has included opening eight shows for U2 and six shows for the Rolling Stones.

Both bands are from California and released their first albums in 1997.

"We strive for up-and-coming bands," said Dan Napolitano, adviser to SAB. Napolitano works with SAB to determine which bands will come to Alfred.

The process to bring the bands to Alfred began earlier this year.

SAB continually receives information on which bands are touring and available. During the fall semester SAB issues surveys and holds open forums to get student input.

SAB's executive board of 13 people ultimately decides which band to put a bid in for. Groups that want to book bands can only place one bid at a time, and are committed to paying the band if the band decides to perform. A bid can also be withdrawn if the group suspects the band may not accept the offer.

SAB placed a bid for Smashmouth and Third Eye Blind at the end of last semester, said Tricia Debertolis, assistant director of the Campus Center. She said the group put in one other bid which was not accepted.

The number of students who volunteered to help with the show was more than double the number in past years, said Napolitano.

SAB members had to sort through over 150 e-mails to choose 100 students to work the show. Napolitano said the volunteers will get a T-shirt and a chance to meet the bands.

Tickets for the show went on sale on Feb. 9. Remaining tickets will be available to the general public starting Feb. 23 in the office of Student Activities.

Queen rules AU chorus

BY RICH ROBBINS

The Alfred University Chorus is temporarily under the direction of royalty.

Todd Queen is directing the chorus and giving some private voice lessons while Luanne Clarke is on maternity leave. He began teaching chorus in January, though he had started private lessons with some students last semester. He will be here for the rest of the semester.

Queen said he is extremely excited about the chorus because of the overwhelming turnout—over 100 people are now participating in chorus.

Queen also said he is excited by the amount of talent at Alfred, which he found surprising since there is no music major.

Queen said he has been having a great time at AU and is looking forward to a productive semester. When asked why he chose to come to Alfred, Queen answered, "The building and surrounding area are great, and these are the best facilities I have seen."

Queen is currently completing his doctorate degree in vocal performance at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, where he formerly earned his masters degree.

The chorus will be giving a concert of show tunes during Hot Dog Day weekend, on April 26 at 3 p.m. Queen will also be giving a recital on March 1 at 3 p.m. He will be singing several pieces with the Geneseo String Quartet from Rochester. □ and distant looks.

In "Where Are They Going?" Borchard and dancers explored personality and individuality via pedestrian movements and gestures such as hair tosses and annoyed glances.

Forti danced between a circle of light and darkness with pure, strong movement in her piece to Ani DiFranco's "Not So Soft."

Society's distaste for round bellies battled their natural existence in Kaplan's "(Don't) Forget to Suck In." The angst of having "squidge" around the middle was celebrated in the second half in an explosion of movement set to live drumming.

Borchard's final solo piece mixed language and dance to illustrate recent changes in her life. Speaking as in a prayer, Borchard thanked those who supported her through college's transitions. □

APO marries 70 Alfred students

BY MEGAN ALLEN

Showing their Valentine's Day spirit, approximately 70 Alfred University students got married last Thursday.

Polygamy and same-sex marriages were acceptable at these ceremonies, which were sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega, a co-ed service fraternity.

For 50 cents, couples (or groups) received two rings, a "marriage certificate" and a simple ceremony. The vows did not demand too much of the brides and grooms, with phrases such as "...I will care for you and share my life with you till we both choose otherwise."

In addition to the rings and ceremony, participants could have a Polaroid photo taken of themselves for $1.50. A bow tie, top hat, veil and flower bouquet were available for students unprepared for the occasion.

"It's a fun, different thing to do for Valentine's Day," said Teresa Vincent, president of APO. This is the first year the group has held weddings. She also wanted to stress, however, that the marriages were of course not legal in any way.

Participating students appeared to be enjoying their first walks down the aisle. Some did express reservations, however. Freshman Clinton Powell, for instance, asked if prenuptial agreements were available, before marrying freshman Beth Grimes.

Even without a prenuptial agreement the couple soon had taken their "vows," and said they planned to go to the dining hall to celebrate, perhaps with some peanut butter cake.

"It's fun and you get a picture," said Cecily Rogers, explaining why she and Kristen Ernewein decided to get married. The couple said they had not planned a honeymoon or told their parents yet. Their union was a little bittersweet, since both are seniors and only have a few more months to be together before graduation.

Freshmen Missy Pritchard and Wes Choy agreed their marriage was their main Valentine's Day activity. They decided to get married "just for the fun of it," said Pritchard. A honeymoon seemed unlikely for the couple, since "we've got rough schedules," explained Choy.

Another couple quickly proved themselves to be a perfect match. "[We got married] because I love Althea and it was cheap," explained Jenny Gulus, a senior student. And what was Althea Sawyer's reason? "... because I love Jenny and it was cheap," she said. Clearly, a match made in heaven. □

Corning offers fun

BY TRACI GARDNER

If you are tired of exploring Hornell or Wellsville, take a slightly longer drive to Market Street in Corning. Market Street offers a variety of shops and is only about an hour drive away.

Market Street is lined with businesses of all types, including professional offices, banks, restaurants and shops.

Gift shops on Market Street offer a variety of items including pottery, toys, candles, baskets and glass items.

Some stores carry specialty items. For instance, Culture Shock offers ethnic carvings, baskets, jewelry and clothing. The store also carries artwork and furniture from many different cultures. "We carry items from all over the world, including some from this area," said storeowner Quita Inga Sick.

Also Comics for Collectors carries comics, games and collectibles. "This store has the best assortment of comic books I've found in this area," said customer Mark Amphlett.

Within walking distance of Market Street are several clubs and bars and an ice skating rink.

There are also several museums within walking distance, including the Corning Glass museum.

To get to Market Street: Go about 50 miles east on Rte. 17.

Senate UPDATE

BY MICHELLE PANCOE AND STEPHANIE WEBSTER

The financial restructuring proposal passed at a recent Senate meeting.

Also at recent meetings, the candidates for president and vice president discussed campus issues. [See article on page 1]

The financial restructuring policy evenly distributes money among all organizations, instead of the current division between standing and cabinet organizations. It will also allow organizations that are currently regulated financially to apply for unregulated status.

One of the concerns about the proposal is that allocation of funds will occur within the councils, possibly encouraging competition among organizations. Jim Kostiw, finance chair, said there is already competition for funding and the new proposal will encourage cooperation.

Elections for president and vice president will be next Monday and Tuesday. President Christina Lombardi told candidates they cannot go door-to-door in residence halls or campaign in libraries according to University rules.

Committee chairs gave reports on their progress. Greg Hilgert, the new chair of the Renovations Committee, said the committee had visited several residence halls, noted minor problems and discussed them with Physical Plant.

The most frequent suggestion on the tutoring surveys was more publicity for existing services, so that is what the Academic Affairs Committee will work on next, said Chair Dustin Weideman.

The Safety Committee will be working on making parking more convenient for upperclassmen, said Chair Sally Prue. She also said the stairs from Ade Hall to Kenyon are being fixed.

The Festival of Nations has been postponed and the Spirit Committee is planning to help with Hot Dog Day.

Lombardi said there will be a new $5,000 limit from the University for students who want to study abroad. Previously students could request any amount they needed and money would be allocated until the money was gone. She said the new limit is intended to make funding more equitable.

The Senate Executive Board spent $266.02 less than the $500 they were allocated in the fall.

The benefit show for the Red Cross will be Feb. 28.

A copy of the Senate newsletter sent to the Trustees is available at the information desk. □

Speaker encourages an open mind

BY STEPHANIE WEBSTER

Ted Smith, a residence hall coordinator at Alfred State College, began his recent presentation about homophobia by asking listeners to answer 10 questions about him.

The questions pertained to the simple assumptions people make about other people every day, from assuming their age to hobbies to sexuality. You can't just assume things about people based on their outward appearances, Smith explained.

He presented the assembled students and faculty with a contract for discussing issues of sexuality during his Feb. 8 presentation. "I have permission to struggle with these issues and to be up-front and honest about my feelings," the contract stated.

"I'm not here to change your opinions, beliefs or culture," Smith said. The contract asks people to be open and respectful, he explained.

Smith discussed stereotypes with the group. Some common stereotypes of gays include expressive hand movements, effeminate behavior and lisping, Smith said. Many people assume that lesbians are "butch" and more masculine, he added.

Smith then asked students to brainstorm a list of terms used to refer to both straight and gay, lesbian or bisexual people. Students came up with terms such as "normal, wholesome" and "moral" for heterosexuals, and "perverted, queer" and "flaming" for gays, lesbians and bisexuals. This is common of our heterosexist society, one in which straights are favored and gays are discriminated against and excluded, Smith explained.

He concluded the discussion by handing out printed information about becoming an ally. An ally is someone who supports gay, lesbian and bisexual causes, Smith said. An ally should try to make his or her environment a comfortable one for all people, and to advertise it as such, said Smith. "You don't put up a billboard that says 'I am an ally; come speak with me.' □

Filmmaker visits

BY STEPHANIE WEBSTER

Politics became personal for the residents of Hong Kong in May 1997 and J. Tobin Rothlein was there to record their reactions.

On July 1 Hong Kong, a commonwealth of Britain, was given to the Chinese. Rothlein traveled to Hong Kong in June and July to talk to the residents and to document the situation.

Rothlein spoke of his experiences documenting and showed a clip from the film at the Feb. 12 Bergren Forum, titled "Through the Eye of the Storm."

Rothlein, who studied Chinese in college, originally received a fellowship to work in Hong Kong for MTV. There he received his first introduction to the "fears, concerns and worries" of the residents of Hong Kong. Despite the only recent Western press coverage, the changeover was "heavy on the minds of the people of Hong Kong for at least 10 years," said Rothlein.

The environment in Hong Kong was very tense, Rothlein said, and the non-Asian film crew caused some people to put their guard up. Potential interview subjects wanted clarification as to exactly what the crew was doing and what they were getting involved with, he explained.

Most of the interview subjects backed out because they were afraid to get involved, he added.

The police kept tabs on Rothlein and his crew, he said, but the crew didn't worry about whether or not they would get in trouble. "We just did it," he said.

The segment of his movie Rothlein showed dealt with efforts to erect a monument for the Tiananmen Square massacre called the Pillar of Shame. The efforts were met with great governmental resistance.

Finally it was decided that the statue should be a gift to a student union at a Hong Kong university. Since the student unions have a great deal of power in Hong Kong, explained Rothlein, universities would be the best places to ensure that the statue was displayed.

In the film, Linda, a Hong Kong university student, tells of the struggle the students had to get the Pillar of Shame onto their campus. On the night of June 4, the anniversary of the massacre, the students took the statue in a truck to their school. Guards and police blocked the gates. A policeman even reached into the cab of the truck and took the key from the ignition.

Many students gathered and protested, and the police were forced to let the statue into the school. The protest was a rare event, said Rothlein, because students in Hong Kong are encouraged to concentrate on their studies and not to participate in such things. The statue still stands on the University's campus.

Rothlein said he does not know what has happened with the students or the statue since he left Hong Kong.

GPA thins out basketball team

BY JUSTIN MORTON

Four players from AU's men's basketball team were removed from the team for the spring semester due to academic ineligibility.

Students are put on probation if they cannot maintain a 2.0 GPA. Any student on probation is not allowed to participate in Alfred's sports program.

Three of the players, Chris Downing, Demeatrich Pound and Brendan Alberto, were undergraduates and were unable to maintain the required GPA.

The fourth player, Carlton Winslow, a graduate student, needed a 3.0 in order to continue at Alfred. The school allowed him to remain at Alfred only if he stopped playing basketball.

Jay Murphy, head coach of the basketball team, called the loss "a huge blow."

"It's frustrating as a coach," he said. Now he has to recruit nine or 10 players for next season, he said.

Murphy said he felt he had done all he could to help his players. Three of them were in a study hall eight hours a week with the assistant coach, explained Murphy. "You can't take tests for them," he said. "They just need to be responsible."

Pound said, "It was just outside things" that contributed to his low grades. Pound said he does not blame anyone but himself, and plans on remaining at Alfred until he graduates. Currently he is not planning on rejoining the team in the fall.

Devon Downing, a starting sophomore for the team, believes it all comes down to honesty between players and the coaches. Downing said the coaches always asked if players needed tutors and many of the players who said they did not need tutors were the ones that later became ineligible to play.

Currently the basketball team only has eight players. Yet this does not discourage Murphy. "Our starting five is solid," he said.

Brian Quinlan, also a starter, said, "Even though we lost four players the core of the unit still remains. But... with four less players [it] makes it difficult to practice."

Murphy offered this statement to symbolize next semester: "Never say die."

Downing agreed. "This group of guys is more together as a team. They know what their roles are," he said. "We just have to continue building for next season," said Downing. □

Track teams go to States, members set school records

BY ANDY BERMAN

With their season almost over, the men's and women's indoor track teams are peaking at the perfect time, with the State meet rapidly approaching.

"In the last two weeks we have shown great improvements," said Assistant Coach Dan Murdock. Since winter break sophomore Jen Ares has set a school record in the 400m and freshman Jen Bonner became the first female pole vaulter in the history of AU track and field.

Head Coach Gary Aldrich said this team "is willing to try or do anything for the team." For example, many of the athletes are running different events than they are used to, said Aldrich.

Before the end of break, Bonner was hit by a car, said Aldrich. The team was worried about her, and due to her injuries, Aldrich decided to train her as a pole vaulter. Though she had never tried the pole vault before, Aldrich said he hopes she will score in the State meet.

Murdock said the team is now, "geared towards the State meet. All the runners are either trying to qualify or improve their qualifying times." He said he believes as a team they will do better this year than they did last year at States.

Aldrich said he is hoping both the men's and women's teams improve over last season at States. He said he hopes the men are again President's Athletic Conference Champions, and that the women improve on their fourth place finish last year.

Aldrich said primarily the indoor season is training for the outdoor season. He said he hopes the few runners that do have injuries heal soon so they can begin practicing for the upcoming outdoor season.

Murdock agreed. He said he is hoping for a strong performance at States, so the team can "springboard into the outdoor season."

USCSA lets AU ski team complete season

BY ANDY BERMAN

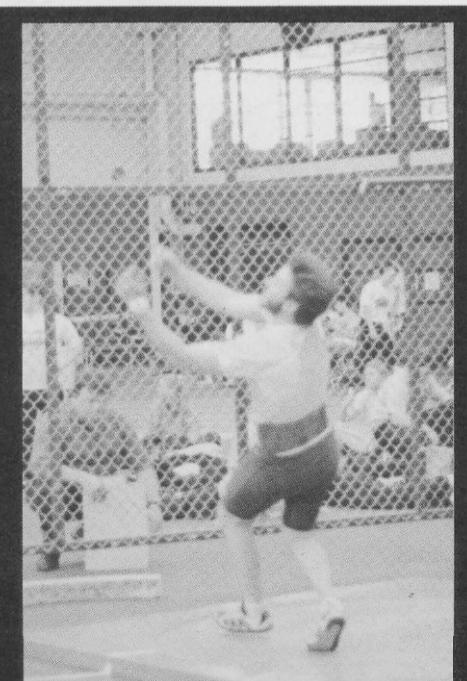

Despite an unenrolled student competing, the AU men's ski team will be allowed to compete in the United States Collegiate Ski Association (USCSA) Mid-East Regional Ski Meet next weekend.

Timothy Clary was enrolled as a junior at the beginning of the ski season last semester. However, Clary never enrolled for classes for the spring semester and therefore was not eligible to compete, said alpine ski team Head Coach Peggy Axtel.

Axtel said that USCSA officials met and decided to allow AU to compete in regionals.

However, Clary's times will be removed, and the team's scores will be recalculated. At a meet, each team is allowed to ski five members. The top three times from the five are then added to
