DESKTOP NOTE: An example of a Cucumber Magnolia Tree

KRYSTAL LASKARIS Staff Writer

The Miller Center for the Performing Arts at Alfred University's (AU) Biology and botany department is developing an interactive and hands-on tour of the indigenous trees of AU. The project was initiated by Dr. Cheryl D. Emmons of Alfred’s biology department.

Dr. Emmons and several biology majors, including Dr. Cheryl D. Emmons, Anthony Charles Edmondson, Luke Lettich, and C. Euan King, have been working on the project for several years. The project began with an analysis of the trees on campus, followed by a survey of the surrounding area to identify the species of trees.

The tour, which is scheduled to begin in the spring of 2015, will start at the Miller Center for the Performing Arts and will proceed to several locations on campus, including the Davis Science Center, the Academic Commons, and the Recreation Center. The tour will be led by Dr. Emmons and a team of biology majors and graduate students.

The tour will highlight the significance of each tree, including its ecological and cultural importance. It will also provide opportunities for students to learn about the trees’ adaptations to their environment and the challenges they face.

The tour is free and open to the public. It will be offered on a limited basis, with tickets available on a first-come, first-served basis. For more information, please contact Dr. Emmons at cheryl.emmons@alfred.edu.
