“There’s no way for high schoolers to really know what the next stage of their life will be like, but that doesn’t mean they can’t get a good preview with a pre-college summer program,” Carrie Sealey-Morris, editor for Value College, commented in an email to institutions listed in the Top 50 rankings. “Residential programs for high school students give them a taste of classes, campus life, extracurricular activities, and more, within a safe, controlled environment. Your program gives young people a realistic, valuable experience that can make a real difference in their lives.”
